just want to highlight some of the points, Madam, if you permit me for a few minutes.

Madam, as you know, the national programmes are looked after by the Central Government and the other health programmes are looked after by the State Governments. Under the national programmes, we have the leprosy eradication programme, the malaria control programme and a few other national programmes. We are trying to help the State Governments through these programmes to control these diseases and trying to eradicate these diseases from our country. As there is time constraint, I don't want to elaborate and go into the details. We will definitely take note of all the suggestions which the hon. Members have made on all points.

As regards the family welfare programme, all the hon. Members have said that the explosion of population was a mojor problem in our country. From the Central Government side we are trying to give a boost to the family welfare programme, that is, on a voluntary basis. The success of this programme depends mainly on the active co-operation of the State Governments. I would like to mention about the achievements of some of the States in the country, that is Kerala, Tamil Nadu and Goa. They have performed very well in regard to family welfare programme. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the major States, that is, U.P., Bihar and Rajasthan. The performance of Rajasthan in the field of family welfare programme is not satisfactory. Their performance compared to other States is very poor. I am sure all the Members, in their representative capacity, would definitely try to address themselves to this national programme. If we fail to control population explosion in our country, it will definitely affect our other national programmes. It will affect our economic programmes also. Some lady Members expressed their concern about the methods of family planning. We have taken note of all their suggestions. We have taken more of all their suggestions. We will definitely look into their suggestions, madam, a few days back a copy of the draft National Population Policy was laid on the Table. This House will deliberate upon the formulation of the National Population Policy of our country. The Government would certainly be guided by the valuable suggestions of the hon. Members . With these few words, I once again assure all the hon. Members that we have taken note of all their suggestions and as far as possible we will try to implement them in our future programmes. Thank you.
